We recently entered the offshore energy market in West Africa and needed advice on numerous issues in multiple West African jurisdictions. Rather than searching for local counsel in each country, we engaged Dentons to canvass their correspondent counsel. With their knowledge and expertise, Dentons were able to both understand what we needed and elicit on-point, concise responses from their contacts in each country. In addition, they provided their own guidance from years of experience. Hiring Dentons may have seemed like an added level of expense, but it turned out to be far better and more efficient than if we had undertaken the process ourselves. While we have gone on to establish our own relationships with the local counsel engaged for the project, Dentons remain an active and vital resource for us in our West African business, and we will certainly be asking for their advice as we seek to expand our work in Africa.”
